I. Course Description

The course will be concerned with the study of the life of Paul within the framework of the development of early Gentile Christianity. We will study the nature of Paul’s background in the Diaspora, his conversion, and details of his Christian missionary work especially noting his paradigmatic role in shaping the doctrine and thought of Gentile Christianity.

The letters of Paul are the best sources for his life, so we will survey all of Paul’s canonical letters and study in detail the major letters in what can be defended as chronological order to get a broad picture of Paul’s thoughts and the problems he encountered. We will also spend some time in noting the impact of his thought on the West and evaluate his significance for contemporary society.

Procedurally, each afternoon we will have a lecture with time provided for discussion. Usually after break we will discuss the lecture further as well as the secondary reading. Three one hour quizzes will come at set times throughout the course.

II. Goals

1. To provide a comprehensive overview of the life of Paul—one of the most pivotal figures in shaping mainstream Christianity to this day.

2. To provide tools for the student to do historical study of the Bible enabling him/her to teach New Testament letters at the level of serious Bible study in the life of the average congregation.

3. To promote reflection on the key theological features of Paul’s way of looking at the world which provided the basic agenda and much of the terminology of later Christian theology.
III. Objectives

1. The course will give the student essential information about the life and correspondence of Paul within the context of early Christianity enabling the student to appreciate Paul’s significance.

2. By studying the basic order and sequence of Paul’s letters the student will gain a deeper appreciation of the context and intricacies of Paul’s theological development.
